EVENT OVERVIEW

Los Angeles is once again the location of the second annual iCA Summit, building directly on the success of the inaugural 2025 event and outcomes. This three-day gathering brings together leading engineers, policymakers, and industry pioneers to tackle the massive carbon footprint of modern data centers and cloud networks. Set against the backdrop of a rapidly expanding digital economy, the conference addresses the urgent need to align technological growth with aggressive climate targets.

Our program will center on Action and Impact, with the iCA's own foundational pillars providing the background: materials, equipment, power, and water. Daily keynotes, expert panels, and collaborative working group sessions will explore such areas as innovations in low-carbon construction materials, energy-efficient systems for IT and MEP, and renewable power integration for continuous grid stability. We'll address critical water conservation strategies, tackling the intensive cooling demands that strain municipal resources and the opportunities to innovate for the future.

Attendee engagement is designed to turn climate theory into actionable corporate roadmaps. By uniting diverse stakeholders from across our iCA Membership and Strategic Alliance network, the summit fosters vital partnerships to accelerate sustainable infrastructure deployment. Participants leave with practical frameworks to reduce emissions while maintaining high performance and reliability.

Three Days. One Objective:

Bring together the leaders of digital infrastructure to reduce our industry's carbon footprint.
